Start with one post

Open Content_Vault.xlsx and filter the Ideas tab to your topic. Choose one brief you can demonstrate today. Read its footage and takeaway columns, then choose a suitable opening from Hooks. Use Scripts for complete examples. The CSV folder provides a plain text version of every content library.

The social layouts are editable in PowerPoint and can be imported into Canva. They are a shared template set also included in the Faceless Starter Kit.

Turning one idea into a useful post

Choose the question before the hook

A specific viewer question gives a post direction. For example, “How do I start organizing a room when I only have a few minutes?” can become a one shelf demonstration. An opening line should explain the actual help the post provides.

Use the brief as a filming plan

Each Ideas row has a stable ID, niche, topic, format, opening, footage, takeaway, and next action. IDs such as V016 let you find the same idea in a calendar or script. The opening in Ideas is a plain starting sentence. The Hooks tab provides alternate structures to customize.

Post element	Filled example
Audience question	Where do I start with a cluttered room?
Opening	If a whole room feels like too much, start with one shelf.
Footage	Shelf before, items removed, sorting, shelf after
Explanation	Finish one area and separate items that belong elsewhere.
Next action	Save this for a smaller organizing session.

Customize the copy

Replace every bracket with a specific detail. A hook that says “I tried...” needs a real attempt. A before and after needs an honest starting point. Use fictional on screen examples when a real bill, resume, client file, or account could expose private information.

Adapt an idea to another niche

A drawer audit can become a makeup bag audit. A routine checklist can become a client handoff checklist. Keep the useful principle, then write footage and examples that belong to your actual subject. Avoid swapping only a noun while leaving an irrelevant explanation.
